Changes coming to Kellogg dog field

Changes will be coming to the Anderson Township Park District's Kellogg Park dog field in the next few months.

The Park District plans to replace the fence around the dog field, 6701 Kellogg Ave., in Anderson Township, and change how members access the area.

Work on the fence, which is about 50 years old, should be complete by November and the access change may take longer, said Park District Executive Director Ken Kushner.

Dog field members are required to keep their permit visible and two chain link fence gates are all that restrict access to the area.

Mt. Lookout resident Fred Weckel and his dog Milo come to the Kellogg Park dog field almost every day.

After the change, current permit holders will be required to punch in an access code to enter the dog field area, Kushner said.

Each permit holder will be assigned a code and the Park District will monitor that code's use to make sure it's not passed around to non-permit holders.

"We know from our observations that most people are down there at certain times," Kushner said.

"If a code is used five times a day, we'll know that's probably not the same person."

Tony Berning comes to the dog field almost every day with his dog, Duke, and said the new access code is a good idea.

"It will keep the non-members from coming in, and we don't know if their dog has current shots or a license," he said.

Tony Berning frequently comes to the Kellogg Park dog field with his dog, Duke.

To be a member of the Kellogg Park dog field, pets must be licensed, vaccinated, wear a collar with current tags and be older than four months.

Fred Weckel, who also comes to the dog field almost every day, said though some non-permit holders may come in it doesn't happen very often.

"Most people come on a fairly regular basis and we know each other by face, name or recognize the dog," he said.

Kushner said not many people buy the daily pass so changing access should not be an issue. Visit the Anderson Township Park District website for permit information or dog field rules.
