Last year, the Anderson Township Park District opened the contest to the community for the 10th anniversary.

Marketing Director Alli Cottrill, who used to design the posters, said about 25 people entered the contest last year and Lawrence Sahulka came out on top.

"It was fun ... and very enjoyable working on the project," he said of the experience.

"I enjoy the park system so it was easy to get motivated."

Sahulka said he found his inspiration from environmental things at Beech Acres Park and wanted to include a sense of the festival, though he never attended Greater Anderson Days prior to winning the poster contest.

Sahulka has a design background and offered some advice to those who enter the contest this year.

"My advice would be for people to express themselves wholeheartedly on the piece and do what appeals to them," he said.

The deadline to enter is Friday, May 8.
